

Slavoj Zizek
(11/16/99)

"A startling critic of great daring, who doesn't watch his back or observe the pieties as he swerves and swoops through the age of globalized images and fabricated realities." -- The Times Literary Supplement

"Zizek is a one-person culture mulcher ... a fast-forward philosopher of culture for the post-Cold War period."-- The Village Voice Literary Supplement

Alternately described as "one of the most arresting, insightful and scandalous thinkers in recent memory" and "the Giant of Ljubljana," Slavoj Zizek is a leading intellectual and commentator on subjects ranging from Lacan and German Idealism to opera to the war in Bosnia and NATO's intervention in Kosovo. He is currently Senior Researcher at the Institute for Social Studies, Ljubljana, Slovenia, and was recently Visiting Professor at the New School for Social Research, New York. Zizek also ran as a pro-reform candidate for the presidency of the republic of Slovenia, then part of Yugoslavia, in 1990.

Zizek's books include The Ticklish Subject (1999), The Plague of Fantasies (1997), The Indivisible Remainder: Essays on Schelling and Related Matters (1996), The Metastases of Enjoyment: Six Essays on Women and Causality (1994), Tarrying With The Negative: Kant, Hegel And The Critique Of Ideology (1993), For They Know Not What They Do (1991), and The Sublime Object of Ideology (1989).

A bibliography can be found here:
<http://www.lacan.com/bibliographyzi.htm>